Reach to Recovery is a place to find resources to help you and your loved ones manage your lives through cancer treatment and recovery, and get the emotional support you need. In addition to American Cancer Society programs and services, we can also help connect you to additional free or low cost resources from other organizations.

Support is provided one to one. A volunteer is selected to meet with you by phone or video chat to discuss your concerns and lend emotional support and education about diagnosis and treatment.

The 24/7 cancer helpline provides support for people dealing with cancer. Connect with trained cancer information specialists who will answer questions about a cancer diagnosis and provide guidance and a compassionate ear.

Reach to Recovery is an arm of the American Cancer Society. There are no regular support group meetings.

Road to Recovery is a program where volunteer drivers provide rides to patients who have no way to get to their cancer treatment.
